Three of the largest fast-food companies in the world (Yum Brands, McDonald's and Burger King) are now working in partnership with the Coalition of Immokalee Workers (CIW), an internationally-recognized farmworker organization, to secure real rights for workers in their tomato supply chains.

Chipotle, however, despite its much-publicized commitment to "food with integrity," has refused to do the same. Dignified wages and safe working conditions apparently don't fit into Chipotle's definition of "integrity." The country's fastest growing Mexican food chain continues to turn its back on the sub-poverty wages and sweatshop conditions they force their farmworkers into every day.
